For most healthcare organizations, payroll and staffing represent the single largest cost driver, yet many companies lack clear visibility into how their labor expense impacts overall financial performance. Flychain and Viventium are partnering to bridge this gap by connecting workforce operations with clean financial reporting and actionable insights.

Viventium provides industry-specific workforce management tools designed to support the complex needs of post-acute and behavioral healthcare organizations, including multi-state operations, credentialing, and regulatory requirements. Flychain complements this with healthcare-specific bookkeeping, tax strategy, working capital, and CFO-level intelligence that helps practices understand margins, manage cashflow, and make informed decisions.

"Labor is the largest and most important investment for healthcare providers, but it's often the least clearly understood from a financial perspective," said Ethan Schwarzbach, CEO & Co-Founder of Flychain. "Viventium gives post-acute and behavioral healthcare organizations the tools to manage their workforce effectively, and Flychain turns that data into financial clarity so owners can understand true labor costs, profitability, and how to scale sustainably."

To be successful, you need a thoughtful strategy to enhance administrative operations, recruit staff, and enhance the overall employee experience." said Navin Gupta, CEO, Viventium. "By partnering with Flychain, we're furthering our support into streamlined financial visibility, helping companies connect their people operations to the broader overall health of their business. We are taking care of the caregivers."
